

Tired of battling dozens of other students for a study room in the Main Library or Zell B. Miller Learning Center? Thankfully, The Red & Black has scoured University of Georgia's campus and the greater Athens area for the best spots to cram for exams before the school year is complete.

UGA Geography and Geology Building

210 Field Ave.

This man-made oasis of silence is nestled on Field Avenue, just behind Sanford Stadium. Secluded from main campus traffic and decorated with a variety of potted plants, display cases of ancient rock formations and a large globe that revolves in the entrance, this building is exactly the place for the student who needs no distractions, but still desires a workplace with scenery.

Foxglove PlantBar

1063 Baxter St.

For the student seeking fresh air during finals without the pesky insects and humidity, this modern greenhouse on Baxter Street is beckoning. While stepping into a shop decked out with lush terrariums, hanging plants and trees reaching floor to ceiling may feel like entering a nature exhibit, the array of couches, ample table space and coffee for purchase make it the best of both worlds.

The Place

229 E. Broad St.

Sometimes, the only thing that can help a UGA student cope with the stress of exam season is a hearty plate of Southern comfort-food. Head just past the Arch into downtown Athens to find a cushioned booth, a warm meal and a retreat from fluorescent lighting. There is no greater combination than filling your brain with knowledge while filling your stomach with the taste of home!

Founders Memorial Garden

325 S. Lumpkin St

For those yearning to reconnect with nature without leaving UGA campus, stroll up to North Campus. Perch on a bench overlooking the coy pond while taking notes or lay out on the lawn with a textbook and a beach towel while enjoying the chirping birds and warm breeze.

The Royal Peasant

1675 S. Lumpkin St.

Athens' very own slice of England awaits students wishing to escape from their restricting exam schedules. Located just off the Five Points intersection, one can grab a boost of caffeine from neighboring cafes, and then settle into a seat illuminated by fairy lights at a pub-style restaurant. This spot allows students to keep their minds on their books while their hearts take a trip to Europe.
