

Five Best Study Spots at Georgia State University

Andrew Young School of Policy Studies

The Andrew Young School of Policy Studies is one of my favorite places to study. You do not have to be a student specifically of the Andrew Young School. To get in, all you have to do is show your panther ID to security. That's it! There's a nice lounge area with wide windows that's great for people watching or studying. The best time to study in there is before lunch hours.

College of Law

The College of Law has several spots inside the building for you to study. The College of Law has a library that's actually quiet compared to the campus library. Also, there are areas in the lobby you can use for studying. There's 300 seating options throughout the library. You can go to the sixth floor which is also known as the "quiet floor" if you want to be able to hear your pin drop.

Centennial Hall

Centennial Hall have a few cozy seats in the building. Go up the elevators and you'll find seating right outside the offices to study. Inside, you'll also find Centennial Café in the lobby where you can grab a cup a coffee before you start studying a couple of floors up. If you want to study close to your dorm, Centennial Hall is a great choice and only a 5 minute walk.

Urban Life Building/Courtyard

The Urban Life Building is one of GSU's older buildings. It has a few floors with lockers and designated areas for studying. It's very quiet in the evening to study. If you like to study outside, the urban life building has a courtyard as well that is connected to the GSU Sports Arena.

Urban-Life-Plaza

Third Floor of Student Center East

I always find myself studying here my freshman and sophomore year. It is always quiet (unless somebody is talking on the phone). On this floor, there's a long row of tablet arm chairs for students to use. The Gallery Lounge is also located on this floor that is extremely cozy, quiet, and features wonderful art projects. The Student Involvement office is also located on the third floor that offers room for students to lounge or study.

Don't let these five spots stop you. Studying inside or outside is easily accessible. Georgia State University is a huge campus that's worth exploring. Explore the buildings on campus. Find an environment that's perfect for your studying needs!
